Michael & Barbara Jewell behind the bar of the distillery

Meet Our Neighbors

Michael and Barbara Jewell started the concept of Jewell Distillery about four years ago with the hope of making great tasting spirits in small, handcrafted batches. They will soon fulfill that dream in a new building located at 120 Monda Way in Blue Lake. This location will also include a tasting and retail room for customers to try all of the wonderful spirits Jewell Distillery will produce.

Once the batches have been made and bottled, Jewell Distillery plans to distribute their products at many of the local stores and restaurants including Murphy's Market. "The Murphy's Market in Glendale has become our neighborhood market. The staff is super friendly and helpful. We love the deli sandwiches, their organic produce and all of the local products that Murphy's has to offer."

Barbara and Michael are excited to bring Jewell Distillery to Blue Lake. "Everyone has been so supportive in our endeavors. We are excited to participate in local festivals and activities." Jewell Distillery is shooting for a grand opening in Spring 2016.

Once they are open, stop by the distillery at 120 Monda Way Unit C in sunny Blue Lake and say hi to Barbara and Michael.

When each gust of wind grabbed it the web convulsed, its thready grid rolling like one of those animations of a space-time warp. Its sole denizen hunched, hungry, in the refuge of a redwood mooring, senses alit with need, as another windy wave tugged at the dawn's dew-beads until they dropped from lofty skeins - a thousand warning lights crashing to the ground. Sans reflection, the newly veiled strands billowed in sticky menace to any hapless wanderers. Yet as the winds ebbed and the day dimmed, the bare silk-beams betrayed their architect, chance's chump, whose darting eyes plied the dusky void for a windfall.

Editor:

I wish to contribute a postscript to Linda Stansberry's fine, well-written and nicely presented cover story about the Carson Block restoration.

It was in 1924 that the building's street facades were covered with stucco. That "modernizing" was mentioned in a Humboldt Standard newspaper article on June 13, 1924. And, in the August 16, 1924 edition of the Standard, there is a large photo of the "newly renovated" Carson building in a full-page completion announcement.

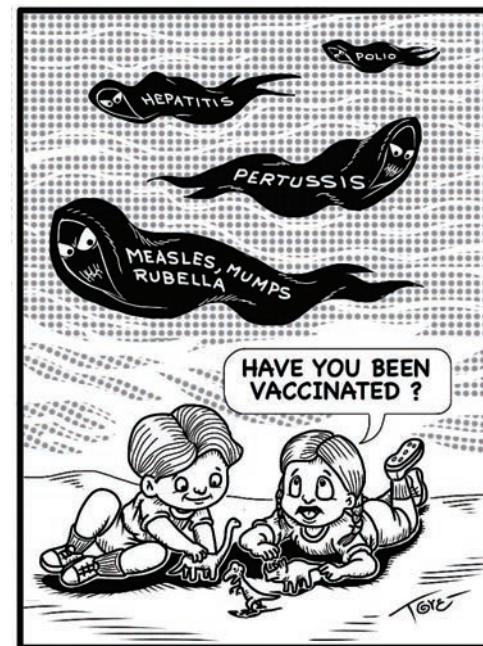

Bob Libershal, Eureka

Clarification:

In the March 17 cover story "Witness Marks," an important figure was overlooked: Lindsey Miller, the lead Carson Block restoration project architect for Page & Turnbull. She drafted the architectural plans for the historic preservation of the building and directed project members for the duration of the project. It has also been pointed out that Pacific Builders, Spectra Company and CJ Sash & Windows were instrumental in reconstructing the turret at the corner of Third and F streets.

Correction:

Also in "Witness Marks," we stated that William Carson maintained the building until its sale in 1923. In fact, Carson died in Terry Torgerson.

1912, and his family maintained the building. The Journal regrets the error.

Salmon Outlook: Less Fish, Less Fishing

After a down year, 2016's fish forecast looks bleak

By Daniel Mintz

Ocean population forecasts for Chinook salmon are well below last year's and, due to abnormal ocean conditions, they may be overly optimistic.

Accordingly, the commercial, recreational and tribal salmon season alternatives chosen last week by the Pacific Fishery Management Council (PFMC) are more restrictive than any seen in recent years.

The 2016 abundance forecast for Klamath River fall run Chinook salmon amounts to 142,200 fish, far below last year's forecast of 423,800. The Sacramento River fall run Chinook forecast — relevant for local fishermen who can travel between Fort Bragg and the San Francisco Bay area — is 299,600 fish, less than half of last year's forecast of 652,000.

But population forecasts are becoming less reliable as ocean conditions change. In a preseason report released last week, the first of three before fishing seasons take effect, the PFMC's Salmon Technical team focused its concerns on the reliability of forecasting.

"The abundance of most coho stocks, as well as southern fall Chinook stocks (Sacramento and Klamath), came in well below preseason forecasts in 2015," the report reads, adding that "this pattern of over-predicting abundance for many stocks also occurred during the strong El Niño events of 1982-1983 and 1997-1998."

With another "very strong" El Niño in the mix now, the continuation of "several phenomena that can be viewed as unfavorable to salmon" — including low biomass and fat content of copepods, a small crustacean prey species — will affect ocean salmon populations.

This year's forecasts may be as inaccurate as last year's. "Given the incidence of over-forecasting abundance for many stocks in 2015, and the apparent continuation of unproductive ocean conditions, the (Salmon Technical team) is concerned that abundance forecasts presented in this report may prove to be optimistic," the preseason report states.

Catch allowances for last year's seasons didn't translate into landings. In 2015, only 109,900 Chinook were caught statewide by the commercial troll fleet despite forecasts of robust abundance.

"Most of the fisheries had real trouble filling their quotas," said Mike Burner, the PFMC's salmon fishery analyst.

What came to be called a "blob" of warm water preceded this year's El Niño, and the combination of events affected salmon distribution and feeding. "Ocean conditions and food supply are very closely tied together," Burner said. "The critical change in the salmon life cycle is when they're out-migrating and once they're in the ocean, anything that affects their food supply has impacts."

Drought is another trigger of impacts, but those impacts will mostly be seen next year and beyond. "A lot of the juveniles that experienced drought are out in the ocean now and they will make up our future returns," Burner said.

For now, tight restrictions on fishing are being proposed due to the low forecast for Klamath Chinook.

Commercial Chinook trollers in the Klamath Management Zone (KMZ) — the area from the state's northern border to the Humboldt Bay South Jetty — are accustomed to being squeezed by September seasons with limited quotas.

That will be seen again this year, as all three season alternatives are limited to the month of September, with 3,000-fish and 1,000-fish quotas. A third alternative is complete season closure.

A KMZ closure would essentially be a repeat of last year's season, which had a 3,000-fish September quota that was irrelevant. After minimal landings at the season's start, fishermen called it a loss and gave up. Commercial landings for the KMZ totaled 46 fish.

For sport fishermen, this year's KMZ alternatives mostly allow fishing for two to three weeks out of each of the late spring and summer months, with a two-fish per day bag limit.

Sport fishing opens up in the areas south of the KMZ, with continuous fishing allowed from early April through October or mid-November from the Shelter Cove area to San Francisco. The more restrictive alternatives for that area include a break from fishing from early to mid-June.

Commercial season alternatives south of the KMZ offer less fishing time than last year, with seasons starting in mid- to late May for the area between Shelter Cove and Fort Bragg, and the months of June and July closed in two out of the three alternatives to avoid contacts with Klamath fish.

From Fort Bragg to San Francisco, seasons start in early May and limit fishing to one to two weeks during June. The alternatives either limit or close fishing during the month of July, but August and September are mostly open in all three alternatives for the area.

Though limited, fishing may be favorable south of Fort Bragg. Speaking as a Eureka fisherman and not on behalf of the Humboldt Fishermen's Marketing Association, of which he is president, Aaron Newman allowed that "it's grim because there's going to be reduced time on the water."

But he noted that 32 million hatchery fish were trucked to Sacramento River estuaries in 2014 and they'll boost ocean populations even if only a small fraction of them survive. He also described this winter as being different from those of recent years.

"The winters have been like summers the last two years — all indications are that we're on the backside of the El Niño now," Newman said.

But there's not much to be optimistic about within the KMZ. Tribal catch allotments for the area only amount to about 7,400 Chinook. Dave Hillemeier, the Yurok tribe's fisheries director, said the Yurok allotment is about 5,900 fish.

"This is the second-lowest allocation the Yurok tribe has had since the mid-1980s," he continued, with only 1992 dipping lower. "It's less than what's needed to meet the subsistence needs of the Yurok tribe and is likely to provide no economic activity."

Last year, the tribe had an allocation of 34,865 adult Chinook but that threshold wasn't reached and only about 26,000 fish were harvested, said Hillemeier.

Klamath basin salmon have faced what can be described as a perfect storm of challenges, both at-sea and in-river. Hillemeier said in addition to warm sea surface temperatures that affected salmon feeding, drought contributed to high rates of infection from Ceratomyxa Shasta, a microscopic, disease-causing parasite.

The short-term future is of concern. Hillemeier said the 2015 cohort of juvenile Klamath Chinook experienced a 90-plus percent in-river infection rate and then faced poor ocean conditions. "We'll see them next year as age-three fish and we'll likely be dealing with the effects of it over the next couple of years," he continued.

In the long term, removal of Klamath River dams is "the biggest of all actions we can take" to improve salmon runs, said Hillemeier.

A second preseason report was poised for release as of press time. Final adoption of the 2016 season fishing seasons is set for the middle of next month. ●

Piecemeal Nullification, Dude

By Thadeus Greenson
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

In what can only be considered a decisive win for marijuana enthusiasts, the United States Supreme Court this week struck down a challenge of Colorado's recreational use law.

Attempting to leverage a provision that allows the SCOTUS to mitigate disputes between states, Oklahoma and Nebraska filed a joint suit directly with the nation's highest court alleging that Colorado's law was in violation of the federal Controlled Substances Act and allowed marijuana to pour over the border and into their states, where it remains illegal.

"The state of Colorado authorizes, oversees, protects and profits from a sprawling $100-million-per-month marijuana growing, processing and retailing organization that exported thousands of pounds of marijuana to some 36 states in 2014," state attorneys for Nebraska and Oklahoma argued in the suit, according to a report in the Los Angeles Times. "If this entity were based south of our border, the federal government would prosecute it as a drug cartel."

In a 6-2 vote, with justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito Jr. dissenting, the SCOTUS turned away the lawsuit, apparently unmoved by the middle states' argument. Perhaps it was just the hypothetical the justices found unpersuasive, as they realize the feds are doing little to prosecute the array of cartels moving untold amounts of illicit products across the U.S. border.

Oklahoma and Nebraska also argued that the Obama administration has essentially turned its back on federal law, and is permitting it to be "dismantled by piecemeal nullification." Nullification, of course, is the theory held by Thomas Jefferson that states can and must refuse to enforce federal laws that are unconstitutional.

Hmm, piecemeal nullification. That kind of has a nice ring to it. Maybe someone ought to name a strain after it.

America's Green Rush is being white-washed, reports Amanda Chicago Lewis in Buzzfeed.

Lewis writes that every state that has legalized medical or recreational marijuana has put laws in place banning people with felony drug convictions on their records from being involved in cannabis businesses at any level, whether it's working for them, owning them, investing in them or sitting on their boards. This has a hugely disproportionate impact on minorities, Lewis writes, and is effectively keeping them out of the budding industry. In her piece, Lewis estimates that fewer than three dozen of the up to 3,600 storefront marijuana dispensaries in the United States — about 1 percent — are owned by black people.

Lewis largely attributes this to the fact that minorities who smoke, possess or grow marijuana have historically been way more likely to get busted for it than their white counterparts. (A recent American Civil Liberties Union analysis found that — though blacks and whites use marijuana at roughly equal rates — blacks are 3.73 times more likely to be arrested for possession.)

But the reporter also notes that there are economic disparities at play as well, as it costs a lot of money to open a weed business and the nation has great wealth disparities along racial lines. (Forbes reports that the typical black household in the U.S. has just 6 percent of the wealth of the typical white household; the average Latino household has just 8 percent.)

Whatever the layered causes, Lewis notes that the weed industry — once "open to anyone with some seeds and some hustle" — is now being concentrated in white hands.

"Legalizing marijuana sounds revolutionary, but with every day that passes, the same class of rich white men that control all other industries are tightening their grip on this one, snatching up licenses and real estate and preparing for a windfall," she writes. "First-mover advantage, they call it."

‘Dead to Rights’

Deputy District Attorney Andrew Isaac on March 18 gave a 45-minute opening statement notably devoid of emotional or dramatic appeal in the first day of the trial for Gary Lee Bullock, who is accused of torturing and murdering St. Bernard Pastor Father Eric Freed on Jan. 1, 2014.

Isaac gave jurors a preview of the evidence he will present in the coming weeks and explained that he plans to call a total of 11 witnesses. Bullock’s attorney, Kaleb Cockrum, opted to hold off on his opening statement until after the prosecution presents its case.

Bullock stands accused of breaking into the rectory of St. Bernard Catholic Church, hours after he was released from the Humboldt County jail, with the intent of stealing Freed’s car. Once in the rectory, Bullock allegedly beat and tortured Freed to death before attempting to burn the residence down, taking Freed’s car and driving it back to his Redway home.

Bullock has entered dual pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity to a total of seven charges in the case. Jurors are presently tasked with determining if Bullock is guilty of the charges he faces. If they decide he is, the case will move on to a second trial in which jurors will be asked to determine if Bullock was legally insane at the time of the pastor’s killing.

Freed was a beloved local figure, both within the church and in the greater community. But jurors heard none of that on March 18, as Isaac didn’t share any details of Freed’s life. Instead, after introducing himself and his investigators, he dove into the details of the case, telling jurors that they will hear recorded jail phone calls Bullock placed to his mother, wife and grandmother. In a portion of one call played for jurors this morning, Bullock can be heard telling his mother that he is going to spend the rest of his life in prison. When she tries to console him, he tells her, “They’ve got video of me. They’ve got me dead to rights.”

Bullock, who sat next to his attorney clad in a burgundy dress shirt, showed little emotion throughout Isaac’s remarks. In perhaps the most dramatic moment of the prosecutions’s opening statement, Isaac held up a chart created by forensic pathologist Mark Super detailing the wounds he found on Freed’s body during an autopsy. “You’ll see Fr. Freed was beaten literally from the top of his head to the tips of his toes,” Isaac said.

Isaac told jurors they will also hear a hint of motive from Bullock himself, referencing a phone call the defendant made to his wife in which he told her that he didn’t call her when released from jail the night of the killing because he didn’t think she would have come to get him and, instead, “figured [he’d] find [his] own way home.”

That Sinking Feeling

The effort to keep Humboldt Bay's derelict boats from going under

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

The sinking of the Dennis Gayle is a success story, perhaps not to boatmakers or historians, but to the people and creatures that call Humboldt Bay home.

On the morning of Feb. 28, someone at the Humboldt Bay Forest Products Dock in Fields Landing noticed the Dennis Gayle, which had been moored there for years, was gone. The wood-hulled ship, a repurposed Naval vessel that was once the last boat to whale out of Humboldt Bay before the practice was banned in the 1970s, was lying at the bottom of the bay. No one yet knows exactly why it sank — a sprung plank in the hull is everyone's best guess — but it didn't surprise anyone. The Dennis Gayle had been ready to go underwater for years. It had turned on its side as it sank, and a thin sheen of oil had covered the surface of the bay near the dock by the time people gathered to look at the space where it had once been.

The bay water, muddied by recent rains, obscured the Dennis Gayle completely. Nearly a month later, somewhere down there still rests the latest example of a serious problem on Humboldt Bay: derelict ships that are listing and deteriorating into the sea, posing environmental and safety hazards to the people who make their livings on the bay.

The Dennis Gayle lies at the confluence of well-intended government programs, the pipe dreams of marine enthusiasts, an aging and changing industry, a lack of money and jurisdiction and the need to protect the bay. At least 10 other boats on Humboldt Bay pose immediate sinking threats, and their potentially hazardous contents are unknown. Few of the owners have the money to deal with them — and, in some cases, even if the money was there, Humboldt Bay lacks the infrastructure to haul them out of the water. And as local agencies look for funding and mechanisms to deal with derelict boats, the problem seems poised to grow.

Let's get back to that success story. In 2008, the Allen Cody, the Dennis Gayle's sister ship, went down. It had been moored at the Humboldt Bay Forest Products Dock, same as the Gayle, and was reportedly dilapidated at the time it sank. At least 220 gallons of diesel fuel spilled from the Allen Cody before responders were able to plug fuel tanks. Under the guidance of the Coast Guard, contractors laid booms in the water to prevent the spread of the leaked oil and sponged it up with absorbent pads. Divers sealed fuel tanks shortly after the boat went down, preventing another 2,100 gallons of fuel from escaping into the bay.

No wildlife was confirmed oiled by the Allen Cody, but eelgrass, an important ecological component of the bay, was damaged and had to be removed near the dock.

"It was ugly," said Jeff Dayton, a Fish and Wildlife biologist who's been part of the local California Department of Wildlife's Oil Spill Prevention and Response team since 2008. "Ugly in the south bay and for the residents of King Salmon."

Within two weeks, a contractor hired by the Allen Cody's owner raised the boat. Eventually it would be pulled onto shore nearby, where it remains today. But before it was pulled out of the bay, while the oil slick undulated on the water, people started worrying about the Dennis Gayle, which even then was in a "significant state of disrepair," Dayton said.

"We were worried about its seaworthiness and ability to float," he said. "It looked like it could sink at any time."

So in 2009, an OSPR specialist boarded the Dennis Gayle and measured the fuel in its tanks and the oil in its engines and generators, finding a few thousand gallons of hazardous materials on board.

Using the financial sting of the

Allen Cody's sinking as leverage — the spill response cost the boat's owner several hundred thousand dollars — Dayton and the OSPR team convinced the Dennis Gayle's owner to have the hazardous materials pumped out of the boat's engine and tanks.

It paid off. The Dennis Gayle is likely leaching creosote and other chemicals from its wood into the water — it's impossible to completely scrub the oil from an old boat — but its sinking didn't warrant a spill response. Dayton said he hasn't seen wildlife impacted by the boat having gone down. The boat's owner saved a lot of money that way, and taxpayers probably did, too (though who will foot the bill to refloat the Gayle is yet to be determined). While all would have preferred if the Gayle had remained seaworthy, OSPR's proactive approach prevented the worst case scenario: a large-scale spill that would have harmed wildlife and brought huge financial ramifications for the ship's owner.

Dayton met the Journal on Woodley Island on a cold, blustery Monday morning, along with his OSPR partner, Game Warden Josh Zulliger. Dayton, dressed in a Fish and Wildlife fleece, talked softly about the Dennis Gayle and the history of oil spills in Humboldt County. Zulliger, who worked for the Coast Guard's Humboldt Bay small boat station during a large oil spill in the late '90s before becoming an OSPR game warden in 2008, was more forceful in demeanor, but both were gregarious. In the span of a few minutes, they chatted with a sheriff's office special services deputy, the Woodley Island harbor master and captain and boat builder Leroy Zerlang. It's their job to know what poses a pollution threat on Humboldt Bay.

A big part of that is knowing which boats are derelict. Ever since the Allen Cody went down, Zulliger and Dayton have gotten proactive with dilapidated boats. That means keeping a keen eye out for neglected vessels and talking with people, like Zerlang, who are doing the same. It also means tracking down and talking to those boats' owners.

Boat ownership, unsurprisingly, is subject to the same foibles as any other human enterprise. "You have people whose intentions exceed their capacity," Dayton said. Or, as Zulliger put it, "Their dreams exceed reality."

Some buy boats because they have a romantic idea of taking to the sea and traveling down to Baja, or of hosting afternoon soirees on a yacht, or of restoring their father's old boat to its former glory. Most of those are "unachievable pipe dreams," Dayton said.

Perhaps no one knows more about the business of rebuilding and maintaining boats on Humboldt Bay than Leroy Zerlang, the owner of Zerlang & Zerlang Marine Services. When he restored the Madaket, he expected it to cost $60,000. It wound up costing him a quarter million. The Golden Rule also cost a quarter million to restore. And the Stephanie, which Zerlang's son Cody Hill hopes to have restored by 2017 for offshore whale watching tours, will likely end up costing $500,000. "A lot of people love these old boats, and a lot of people should love these old boats, but nobody in their right mind has any idea how expensive it is to maintain a boat," he said. "The minute that you stop doing maintenance on a boat, it starts deteriorating."

He's not sympathetic to people who get underwater, so to speak, on their boats. "They have no clue what is going on with the liability or the maintenance of their vessel," he said. "But they're all excited. They go down for the first month or two, hang curtains on it, have barbecues. All of a sudden it's taking on water. So what do they do? They abandon the boat."

For the last couple months, a small sailboat miffed the various agencies that keep an eye on Humboldt Bay. At a recent meeting, Harbor Safety Committee Chair Suzie Houser called the sailboat a "homeless issue on the water." Its owner docked at the Eureka and Woodley Island marinas for a time before being booted from both for breaking the rules.

No one aboard was an experienced sailor, Houser said, and the Coast Guard, having boarded it to check its seaworthiness, determined there was little to no safety equipment on board.

At one low tide — being unable to dock in Humboldt Bay or make it to the next port — the sailboat ran hard aground in the mud. A fireboat had to pull it free, but not before the sailboat had caught a line in its propeller and cut an anchor the crew had forgotten about.

Eventually, with pressure mounting from the Coast Guard and others, the Harbor District was able to convince the boat's owner that it had to come out of the water. On March 18, the district hauled it out of the bay at Fields Landing. The Harbor District mentioned looking into a lien on the boat for the costs of hauling it out, but that process has yet to begin.

City of Eureka Recreation and Facilities Manager Jeff Raimey is in charge of the city's 6.5 miles of tidal coastlands, which include the public marinas. The city currently has two abandoned sailboats at its facility, Raimey said, and he and his staff are going through a lien process to take ownership of the boats. The Humboldt Bay Harbor Recreation and Conservation District, which manages the Woodley Island Marina, goes through a similar process with abandoned or problem boats and it gives the agencies the power to either destroy or sell the ships.

The two sailboats in the city marina are seaworthy, Raimey said, so the city will try to sell them to offset the costly demolition of boats and the expense of the liens, which take three to six months of staff time.

"What we don't want to do is continue to progress a problem boat" by turning around and selling it to another person who can't afford to maintain it, and who'll end up re-selling it, continuing the circle of dilapidation, or re-abandoning it on a public marina, Raimey said.

There comes a point, Zerlang said, when "somebody makes this decision that a boat has to be destroyed. That's hard to do," he adds, with more than a hint of sentiment in his voice.

Hard emotionally, for a boat lover like Zerlang, but hard physically, too. Steel boats have to be cut through. Wooden boats are coated in lead paint and saturated in decades of oil, "You can't just go out and burn it," Zerlang said. Fiberglass boats — like your uncle's ski boat — are dangerous to dismantle. There's pretty much always fuel, oil, batteries, asbestos or some other hazardous material involved.

In Humboldt Bay, most abandoned boats are taken out of the water at the Harbor District's boatyard in Fields Landing — an area some call "Death Row." There, they stay, waiting for the lien process to be complete or for the responsible party — be it city, harbor district or private owner — to find the money to have it demolished. A 30-foot boat, Raimey said, can cost $5,000 just in Dumpster fees to haul the remnants away.

and the city collaborate to cover the costs of abandoned vessels. Most people who talked to the Journal said the harbor district eats a lot of the costs, but because of the piecemeal and collaborative nature of the work, the district couldn't estimate how much it's spent in the last 10 years dealing with derelict vessels.

Zerlang and his employees donate a lot of time and work — whether in consulting on how to best demolish an old boat or pulling it down to the Fields Landing yard.

But Humboldt Bay has limitations. The owner of the Dennis Gayle inquired about hauling it out of the water after the Allen Cody sank, but the Harbor District's boatyard couldn't pull a boat that big out. No one on the bay has the means to even lift it from the bay's floor, in fact.

Just how much of a threat to Humboldt Bay are these derelict vessels? It's hard to quantify. Boats, from small recreational skiffs to 100-foot-long fishing vessels, can contain anywhere from 20 to 20,000 gallons of fuel, not to mention engine oil and other chemicals.

(It should be noted, derelict vessels can pose direct hazards to people as well; when the Dennis Gayle went down, the Sheriff's Office initiated a missing person's report because people feared a man who'd been living on the boat had gone down with it. He turned up safe on dry land, shortly thereafter, but many people buy funky old boats as a cheap place to live. "Somebody's going to get killed," Zerlang said.)

The U.S. Coast Guard has designated seven boats on Humboldt Bay as “abandoned vessels”: Karen Anne II, Fast Horse, Dixie D, Miss Cathy, Alma III, Filthy Oar and Dennis Gayle. That, explained Chief Warrant Officer Billy Gartman, is not a comprehensive list of local problem boats, but it’s compiled every year so local agencies can apply for abatement funding from the California Division of Boating and Waterways. It’s unclear how many of them have fuels or other hazardous materials on board.

Other boats of concern that came up in multiple conversations with the Journal are the High Sea, the Sunset and the 1091. The boats are spread around the bay, from the King Salmon docks north to Woodley Island.

The 1091 is a good example of the tricky situation boat owners can find themselves in between dry dock and sea floor. It’s been moored at the Englund Marine fueling dock since the mid-1980s, when its owner bought it from an Alaskan fishing company.

The 1091 started its life as a Navy Landing Craft Infantry vessel, serving in the 1940s in Okinawa and Korea, according to Leroy Marsh, project manager for the Humboldt Bay Naval Sea/Air Museum, the nonprofit that owns the boat. It was converted to a medical boat in the 1950s before being reserved briefly and then sold into a commercial fishing fleet.

It hasn’t moved off its dock since the museum took ownership in the early 2000s, and its condition has some concerned. Harbor District CEO Jack Crider said now that the Dennis Gayle is underwater, the 1091 is his biggest worry on the bay. The city, he said, rebuffed his offer to help do something about it.

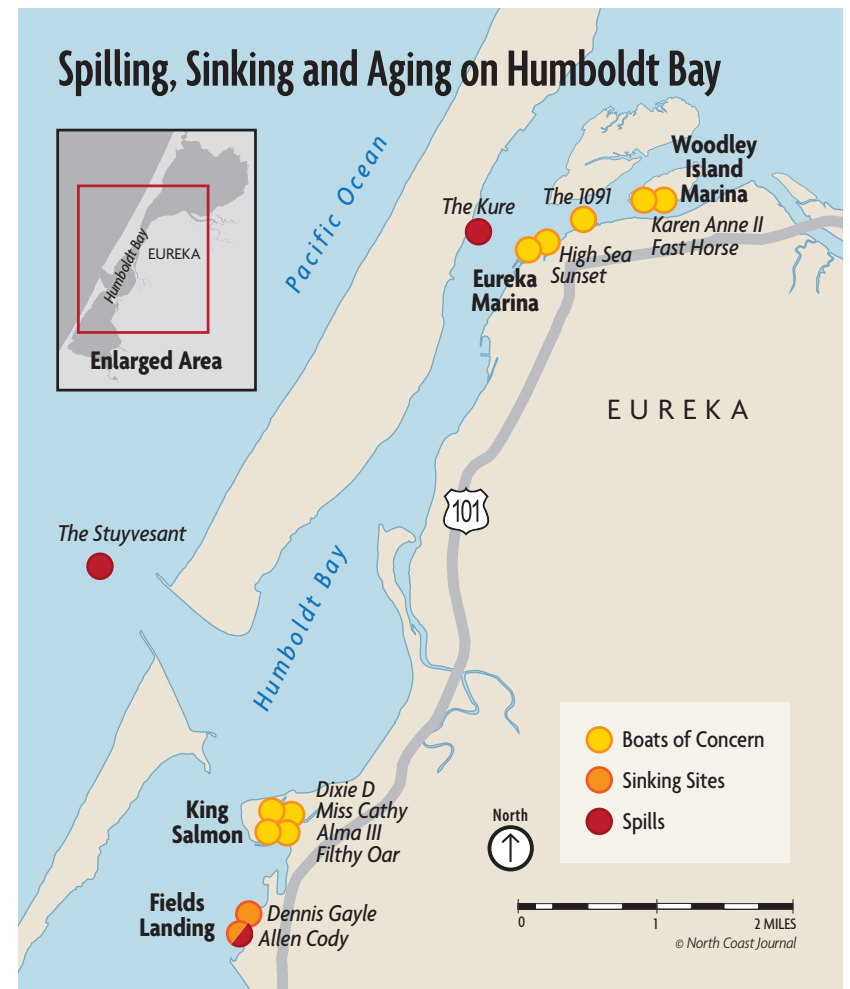

Raimey, the city’s marina manager, said the 160-foot boat is much more seaworthy than the Dennis Gayle was, but noted that because of its size — and a lease dispute with the city — it remains a concern. He said the boat still has fuels on it, though Marsh disputed that, saying the tanks have been stripped and the engine “mothballed.”

Marsh said the 1091’s lease at the Englund Marine dock wasn’t transferred to the museum when it took ownership. That’s caused a bit of stress, but it’s being worked out, he said. And it’s far from neglected, he added. Ten to 15 volunteers come down to the dock on the foot of Commercial Street twice a week to work on the boat. The goal, he said, is to restore it to its Navy shape and maintain it as a historic destination.

It needs major work though, Marsh conceded. It’ll have to be dry-docked so they can look at the hull. There’s no boatyard big enough to do that on

The M/V Kure crashed into the Samoa Pulp Mill dock in 1997, spilling thousands of gallons of fuel into the bay and killing nearly 4,000 birds. The settlement from the spill is still funding recovery programs. File photo

Humboldt Bay, and sailing to another port, hiring a boatyard to haul it out and paying contractors to do the work is prohibitively expensive for the nonprofit.

Marsh said his group instead plans to find a bayside piece of property where volunteers can roll it up on giant airbags and work on the boats hull at their own pace (and at a much lower cost). Finding that property has proven fruitless so far, but Marsh sounds undaunted.

Zerlang said the 1091 is an example of a boat with a “good family.” But it’s still a boat with issues.

One of the biggest sources of frustration to the many people dealing with Humboldt Bay’s derelicts is a 2003 federal buyback program, intended to stabilize the crab and shrimp fishing markets. Congress spent $46 million to purchase commercial fishing permits from West Coast fishermen, banning associated boats from fishing again. The purpose was to reduce the fleet, to “financially stabilize this limited-entry fishery,” according to a federal report.

But the unintended side effect was the creation of a new fleet of boats that had no reason to float. The Dennis Gayle and Allen Cody were buyback boats that languished when they couldn’t fish again. The High Sea was another, and while it’s not abandoned — its owner pays rent at the Eureka marina — its condition troubles some.

“That boat was worth a million in 2003,” Zerlang said. “Now [the owner] probably couldn’t sell it for $30,000. It has nothing in this world to do. It can’t be a tug. It’s too slow for a research boat.”

The only option, he said, is for its owner to invest a lot of money into making it a pleasure boat.

Zulliger, who, along with Zerlang and others seems to maintain a mental catalog of buyback boats, their fates and whereabouts, said there have been buyback success stories. Some have been turned into research vessels, another into a “beautiful yacht,” but most keep bumping from port to port, from owner to owner, slowly decaying into the sea.

Part of the reason buyback boats have such a propensity to become derelicts is a lack of funding to deal with ones that fall into neglect and disrepair. If you register a recreational boat with the California Division of Boating and Waterways, you pay into a statewide abatement fund, which is granted to local agencies yearly to haul out and destroy boats specifically identified as abandoned. (That’s partially the purpose of the Coast Guard’s list — a tool for the Harbor District or city to use to apply for those abatement funds.)

It’s akin to the abatement fund paid into every time you re-register your car with the DMV. But no such fund exists for commercial boats. “There’s no magic pot of money for this,” Dayton said.

So, boats like the Dennis Gayle sit tied to a dock for seven years despite their sinking threat. Now, it sits underwater. While a sheen of oil sits on the water over it, Dayton said he’s observed no negative effects to wildlife, meaning there hasn’t been a formal spill response. That’s good — the efforts to remove hazardous materials were effective — but it also means there’s no pressing need to get the ship off the bay floor. The only hope, outside of the owner coming up with a pot of money to raise it, is for the State Division of Boating and Waterways to visit the site and deem the boat a navigational hazard. Its antenna, which protrudes slightly into the wide channel, is marked with a buoy, and no one at a recent Harbor Safety Committee meeting was sure it constituted hazard status. If it does, the Army Corps of Engineers will have to send a boat up with a lift powerful enough to haul out the Dennis Gayle. No one locally has the means.

Further limiting the options for derelict boats is the fact that owners are not required to have insurance to cover abandonment or pollution in the event of a spill.

When the Allen Cody went down in 2009, divers were able to prevent thousands of gallons of fuel on board from escaping into the bay. Still, more than 200 gallons of oil and other hazardous materials prompted a cleanup that cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. Photo Courtesy of Jeff Dayton Raimey said the city has considered requiring owners to insure their boats as a policy of the public marina but, at this point, it simply encourages insurance and requires boat owners to follow marina rules, which include basic upkeep. Vessel owners are responsible for any damages to the facility or the environment, he said.

But Zerlang said responsible boat owners most likely are paying insurance; it's the people who can't pay the costs associated with a sunken boat or an oil spill who probably aren't investing in insurance. Requiring insurance will only tick them off, Zerlang said, but "[Requiring insurance] is the only thing that will save the marinas — the only thing long term to save our coast."

It all comes back to being proactive, though there's little OSPR can pre-emptively enforce. "You don't have a violation until the fuel's in the water," Dayton said, explaining OSPR's perspective.

"I can't tell a person what to do with his boat," Zulliger said. But he approaches the owners of problem boats and tries to reason with them, explaining their liability, the costs of raising a sunken ship, the potential criminal charges if it causes pollution. Most of the time, people let their dreams shadow the realities.

"They talk like they're receptive — but their actions aren't receptive," Zulliger said. "People are people."

Of course, it's not only abandoned vessels or derelict vessels that can cause problems. The two biggest oil spills in Humboldt County waters came with working ships: the wood chip freighter M/V Kure, which collided with a loading dock in 1997; and the Stuyvesant, a dredge that spilled fuel 2,000 gallons of fuel near the bay entrance in 1999. The combined spills killed an estimated 6,400 birds along a large swath of the Humboldt County coast and prompted millions of dollars in settlements that are still funding restoration programs. Since then, aquaculture has exploded into a multi-million dollar industry on the bay. A modern spill could have grave economic impacts for thriving local oyster farms.

But the dangers of derelict boats are floating close to home, and a lack of comprehensive solutions means they won't be going away any time soon.

"That's one of the absurdities of our system," said Humboldt Baykeeper Executive Director Jennifer Kalt. "[Derelict boat owners] just take out all these fluids and wait for them to sink. It becomes someone else's problem. ... The more government agencies that are potentially responsible, the less you can actually get accomplished.

"From Baykeeper's perspective, it's really frustrating that there are all these systems in place to only deal with it once the pollution happens."

Kalt's not alone in that frustration. While the gaps in jurisdiction and funding make derelict boats a real concern on Humboldt Bay, it's hard to imagine finding a more dedicated group of people than that which sits down regularly at the Humboldt Bay Harbor Safety Committee meetings. They include representatives of the harbor district, city of Eureka, the Coast Guard, Fish and Wildlife, Sheriff's Office, OSPR, the Coastal Commission, NOAA and environmental and industry groups.

Between them, they know just about everything about Humboldt Bay. Except how to get the Dennis Gayle off the bottom. ●

Hum Plate Roundup

Neo-classics

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Greek Drama

I am told by a reliable Greek co-worker that everything is Greek. Everything. And yet when I swung into the office with a paper bag from Humboldt Soup Company (1019 Myrtle Ave., Eureka), there was some panic — from the Greek Panikos, incidentally — as to whether its gyro ($8.29) would be Greek enough.

The meat is key here. There are those of us who look at gyro meat or shawarma — the glistening, rotating column of the Mediterranean/Middle-East's answer to sausage — and recoil. Others among us dream of having a similar set-up beside the couch and shearing off strips of greasy goodness as John Stamos flickers on TV. This gyro is stuffed with beef and lamb shawarma that's soft and spicy, somewhere between sausage and meatball, but not overly salty. It's not exactly the same as the stuff they're slicing off the turning spit in the old country (or in Queens, for that matter) but it's savory and makes the cut.

The pita is legit — warm, soft and grilled — and unlike the usual foil-wrapped, dripping behemoth, the whole thing is pretty. Well, not anger-Hera-and-turn-you-into-the-snake-headed-Medusa pretty, but fancy enough to justify the price. The circles of pink pickled onion are tart and bright against the earthy meat and the tzatziki sauce is lightly garlicky and creamy with cubes of cucumber and tomato. Some fancy lettuce and a dark and nutty tahini spread that adds sweet smokiness are enough to make you forget about all that Greek austerity. Just don't get carried away and throw your plate. It's cardboard and that's not festive, it's littering.

The Case Against DIY

There are some items on a menu that you move right past because damn, you could just throw that together at home. Where's the sous vide? The duck fat fryer?

In what world are you going to pay someone to make you a bowl of black beans with avocado slices? That would be the world of Beachcomber (1602 Old Arcata Road, Bayside), where plastic animal toys signify your table's order and artfully tattooed couples nibble organic scones over the pass-along Chronicle. A reader emailed about the Beloved Bean Bowl ($9.75, $6.95 half order), with its black beans, avocado, poached egg, Jack cheese and salsa, all of it organic, cage-free, etc. The egg yolk is perfectly creamy and the beans are firm and smoky against the bright red onion, tart green chilies and scattering of mango. In short, it bears little resemblance to the cry for help that is your end-of-the-month canned bean bowl at home.

So, too, the smoked tuna sandwich, recommended by the same reader who is clearly not bound by willful self-sufficiency. There is, after all, pleasure in having someone make a sandwich for you — take a moment to reminisce, then make a phone call and reconnect with your parents or that old guy from your favorite deli because that is love. Sure, some may look at an $11 tuna

Righteous indulgence as sandwich.

sandwich (no fries, no sides beyond a pinch of dressed greens) like one of those $400 Pentagon hammers. For one, the city block of a sandwich isn't the canned tuna and mayo you're smashing with a fork at home. It's salted and smoked tuna, rich and oily with black pepper. Mixed in are chopped pimento olives, walnuts and a little mustard on fresh, soft Rosemary focaccia. The kitchen was out of tomatoes when we ordered ours, so shredded carrots were subbed in to fine effect. If you're willing to take that kind of time to spoil yourself at home, congratulations: You and Oprah are living your best lives. The rest of us should probably just order the smoked tuna salad sandwich. ●

Let Me Stand Next To Your Fire

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Since you're a loyal "Setlist" reader, you know I am not above exploiting my children in order to fulfill my word count. In general, I'm just not above exploiting my children. So, not too long ago I found myself showing parts of the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival to my 9-year-old son. The context or reasoning behind this eludes me at the moment, but I did make sure to focus on The Who's performance of "My Generation" and later, The Jimi Hendrix Experience's "Wild Thing." As you know, these two performances have in common what Pete Townsend might call "auto-destructive art." To put it more simply, they destroyed their instruments. Pete and Moonie took out a good part of the stage — in typical Who fashion — and Jimi set his guitar on fire.

Now, you and I are familiar with these historical acts. But my 9-year-old had never seen anything like it before. I wasn't expecting his question, but I was not surprised when he asked, "Why did he set his guitar on fire?"

I had a difficult time trying to answer. Did he not like his guitar? No, that wasn't it. Was he angry? Doubtful. Was he trying to follow up The Who? Probably. I just responded with "Well, he felt like lighting his guitar on fire at that particular moment."

A few seconds passed. Parents are familiar with his follow up: "Why?"

I said something like, "I don't really know, but maybe he wanted people to know the show wasn't really about the instruments the band was playing. Maybe it was his way of expressing that even though the guitar is gone, and the set is over, there's still something left behind with the audience."

To be honest, I don't know why Pete smashed the shit out of his guitar, or why

Jimi torched his axe. But I'm still thinking about it 49 years later, and a 9-year-old now knows about it and may even tell his friends. Maybe I won't tell our son this quite yet, but maybe it was Pete, Moonie and Jimi's way telling us that there are no rules when it comes to art.

Thursday

Arcata has the local music, and two very different kinds of music at that. First, catch Humboldt "nastiest steel band" at Humboldt Brews. Pandemic features traditional pan music and throws in some originals to get you moving. Bring $10 to get in at 9:30 p.m.

If you're looking for some distortion, The Alibi is your spot. Upsidedowncross presents some Whitethorn black metal with Zelosis and some Shively sludge punk from Blackplate. A deal for only $3.

Friday

Not too long ago I found myself sitting at a bonfire in Trinidad singing Eagles songs into the clear and cold night. I also found myself in the company of a trombonist who — after joining in on "Take It Easy" — mentioned that he'd be playing with Burt's Big Band at the Palm Lounge. You'll find timeless and classic songs from the swing era delivered by a 14-piece band, and while you may hear songs from the '20s all the way up to through '70s, don't expect to hear "Take it to the Limit." The music starts around 8 p.m. for a $5 donation.

Richard's Goat Tavern and Miniplex is showing videos about the Rojava Revolution (which has something to do with Kurdistan, I think) with music by Dot Com Dot Com, Catalogue of Sonic Mutations with "other bands and DJs TBA" at 7 p.m.

Recreating the Pink Floyd sound as a 4-piece, Money will return to The Logger Bar in Blue Lake. Hear songs from the Waters era around 9 p.m. for free. (Full disclosure: Self-promotion is uncomfortable for everyone.)

Just down the road, The Getdown funks it up at the same time. The talented locals will ask for none of your money, so reward them with your applause.

Saturday

Jimi Jeff and the Gypsy band will be playing tunes you love at 9 p.m. at Cher-Ae-Heights Casino. Expect to rock out and sing along, but don't expect Jimi to torch his guitar during the last set.

Music from an overlooked composer will be performed tonight up at HSU's Fulkerson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Cellist Elizabeth Grunin performs Mieczyslaw Weinberg's Sonata No. 1 for Violoncello and Prelude 21 for Cello. To make this a truly intimate experience, the audience will be seated on stage for $10.

You can't sit on the stage at The Alibi, but you can pretty much stand on it during angsty indie rock from Chachi Hands and garage pop from L.A.'s ViceVersa. $5 cover charge for this 11 p.m. Humboldt Free Radio presentation.

Tuesday

Sip your beer to the varied and eclectic sounds of locals La Musique Diabolique at Redwood Curtain Brewery in Arcata.

Leftover Salmon plays Wednesday, March 30 at 8 p.m. at the Arcata Theater Lounge.

LMD will be on around 7 p.m. and they're not asking for any of your money at the door.

The Acoustic Africa tour brings Vusi Mahlasela and Habib Koité to the Van Duzer Theater tonight. Outside of performing at Nelson Mandela's '94 inauguration, Vusi has gotten to share the stage with Dave Matthews Band, Sting, Paul Simon and Taj Mahal, to name a few. Habib has his own share of celebrity musicians — Jackson Browne and Bonnie Raitt, among them — impressed by his guitar skills. These two will be sharing the "richness of the African traditions of voice and song" for only $36 at 8 p.m. $10 for HSU students.

Wednesday

"Slamgrass pioneers" Leftover Salmon return to Humboldt to bluegrass 'n' roll at the Arcata Theatre Lounge. No strangers to Humboldt County, where all things jam are appreciated, these folks made the wise choice to have locals The Absynth Quartet start the show and warm up the jam at 8 p.m. Groove on, but bring $30 so you can get in. ● Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m. He has considered lighting other people's instruments on fire.

Got time for a quickie? Swipe right and take in Humboldt State University Opera Workshop's production of the comic opera Speed Dating Tonight! at Gist Hall ($10, $5, $3 HSU students). It's an hour of fast-paced romance and awkward moments with 15 characters. Catch it March 24 through 26 at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, March 27 at 2 p.m. Next!

Chaotic debates and violent political rallies have you wishing for more civilized competition? A spandex smackdown comes to town with IHWE Live Pro Wrestling at the Redwood Acres Fairgrounds on Saturday, March 26 at 7 p.m. ($10, $15 ringside). Brace for the boom when Quiz battles masked challenger Americos — and hang onto your folding chair.

Hop To

This could be the year you hand paint those elegant, gilded Russian Easter eggs and serve that gorgeous Instagram-crushing brunch you've been virtually assembling on your Pinterest board. Unless you have small children, in which case you need to jam some candy into plastic eggs, find some new hiding places, run interference so the eldest doesn't snatch up all the chocolate bunnies and brace yourself for what the ensuing sugar rush will do to your home.

Or you could grab your camera and take the kids out for a community egg hunt in the sunshine with friends, photo ops and plenty of room to bunny hop around. On Saturday, March 26, you've got plenty of choices.

In Eureka, the Carson Park Easter Eggventure goes from 10 a.m. to noon, with games, egg hunting and an Easter Bunny meet and greet. Like all these hunts, it's free, but BYO basket. The holiday hide and seek at McKinleyville Safeway Shopping Plaza has age and special needs groups, and starts at the kiosk at 10 a.m. Catch your breath afterward with an Easter Bunny withie. The Ferndale Easter Egg Hunt gets cracking at 10:30 a.m. at the Firemen's Park with prizes to win in all age groups. The resourceful Ferndale Scouts are doing the hiding, so bring your A-game. And the Soroptimists host the Eel River Valley Egg Hunt in Fortuna's Rohner Park at 10 a.m. — don't be late for the scramble.

Over in Rio Dell's Fireman's Park, the hunt begins at 10:30 a.m. with more prizes, nibbles and games. Want the little ones to eat something more substantial than jelly beans? Shake a cottontail down to Bridgeville Elementary School, where a 10:30 a.m. breakfast ($4, $3 kids) precedes the noon hunt (free).

Step Up

If, like me, your office Dancing with the Stars pool has just begun and you were unlucky enough to draw Marla Maples so that you now have not only a snowball's cha-cha chance in hell at winning the pot, but also feel like you are covered in Drumpf cooties, take heart. You needn't watch the slow, sequined car crash.

Skip the C-list drama and see some real dancing. In fact, you've got a rare chance to see some of our area's best dancers outside of a recital or a holiday show. The Arkley Center for the Performing Arts raises its velvet curtain for Dancing Stars of Humboldt on Saturday, March 26 at 7 p.m. ($15). Expect a cavalcade of styles from dancers and studios around the county. Breakdancing head-spinners The Humboldt Rockers will be both popping and locking, while the hip-shaking Ya Habibi belly dance takes the stage in a swirl of silks. Humboldt State University's Demolition squad and Ariana Atkins-Salazar and Milo Mateer bring hip-hop moves, while the Emerald Coast Irish Dancers stomp it out. There will be ballet from Trillium Dance Studio, an en pointe solo by Iris Van Atta, as well as a hybrid jazz-ballet performance by 2016 Vienna International Ballet Experience winner Melissa Hinz. 555 Dance comes with contemporary dance, and 7- and 9-year-old prodigies Teralee and Karlee Johnson go Broadway with their Hairspray number. Seriously.

There are plenty more names on the bill, which you can check out at www.dancingstarsofhumboldt.com — you may want to stretch.

Merde, everybody.

Milking It

Allegiant and The Bronze

By John J. Bennett

Reviews

DIVERGENT: ALLEGIANT. The horse is long dead, but let's to it. These dystopian future scenarios, wherein mostly attractive young people are compelled to fight and kill one another, occasionally becoming heroes in the process, felt tired from the jump. Now, umpteen variations on the theme later, it has become painfully evident that there is nothing of interest left in the tank, creatively or artistically. Not to mention my longstanding, too-often-elaborated-on frustration that Hollywood refuses to look for inspiration beyond bestseller lists and box office successes of decades past. Now that I've mentioned it: Do we really need eight movies straight from the pages of middling young adult fiction? Of course we don't. Our desires are of little import.

I'm referring, ham-handedly, to the obvious parallels between this, the Divergent series, and the equally lamentable Hunger Games tent-pole. The fans and the purists will surely cry foul, elucidating the critical differences between them. But squint your eyes and it's tough to tell them apart. The latter, of course, has the advantage of Jennifer Lawrence, a bona fide movie star with the acting chops and screen presence to almost elevate the material. Divergent has at its center Shailene Woodley, a talented, likeable young actor, but one whose most pronounced attribute is the manifestation of vulnerability — a weird fit for an action hero, and one that's more pronounced and puzzling with each installment.

Allegiant is the third installment in Divergent series. In a ruined future Chicago, society has been divided according to the attributes of its citizens. Tris Prior (Woodley) learns that she is classified Divergent, that she transcends class divisions. She teams up with some blandly attractive people and spends two movies smashing the system. This brings us to the beginning of Allegiant wherein, system smashed, Tris and her cohort feel compelled to find out what's left of the world outside the city walls. Turns out there isn't much left, and it's populated by high-minded kidnappers-cum-eugenicists led by an ambitious corporate shill named David (Jeff Daniels); conflict ensues.

To be honest, there is so little substance to the narrative here that it becomes difficult to even recall the skeleton of the plot. This may be due in part to the division of one novel into two feature length movies — a well-tested formula, guaranteed to result in failure — but there may not have been a whole lot there in the first place. This presents a curious and unfortunate conflict. The Divergent movies are thoughtfully directed, intermittently beautiful in their art direction and production design, and boast some impressive talent among the cast (Miles Teller does solid work, Naomi Watts and Octavia Spencer appear in supporting roles), but they are straight-up boring. Watching this installment, I struggled to piece together the incidents of the previous two. And I'd seen them both in the theater. In fairness, I am certainly not the target audience, but demographics cannot explain away the absence of narrative inspiration and compelling characters. PG13. 120m. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

THE BRONZE. A hard-R comedy about a nasty Ohioan gymnast coasting on the glory of a third place finish over a decade ago? Sounds promising enough, especially with Gary Cole and Thomas Middleditch in the mix. Middleditch, a gifted improviser and surprisingly capable actor (he anchors the HBO series Silicon Valley), was a particular draw for me. But The Bronze never strikes a balance between coarseness and kindness (not for lack of trying), and ends up mostly tiresome and mirthless.

Melissa Rauch (who co-wrote the script with her husband, Winston Beigel) stars as Hope Annabelle Greggory, reigning celebrity gymnast of Amherst, Ohio, thanks to a miraculous podium finish that marked the end of her athletic career. Hope does everything she can to parlay her one-time success into a lifestyle, which boils down to free milkshakes at the diner and free weed from a smitten mall doofus. Hope is also a deeply unpleasant person: foul-mouthed, disrespectful, grossly sexual and a petty thief. So when, in the wake of her former coach's suicide, she is approached to train rising local talent Maggie Townsend (Haley Lu Richardson), Hope accepts, intending to sabotage Maggie's career and cash in at the same time. In the process, she'll string along sweet-natured assistant coach Ben (Middleditch), spar with former flame/rival coach Lance (Sebastian Stan) and treat her long suffering father (Cole) like a doormat. She might learn something about love and friendship along the way (spoiler alert: she does). No spoiler: It's not enough to save the movie from its own low-brow misanthropy.

Again, I was completely on board with this premise. But about halfway through, I realized that there weren't going to be any more jokes. Rauch et al seem to confident the premise will be enough, that the shock of Hope swearing at her dad and banging every loser in town will generate sufficient momentum to carry a feature. Then, realizing that we can only stomach an unredeemable protagonist for so long, they shoehorned in some hokey redemption and crossed their fingers. As much as I wish it had worked, if only for the sake of comedy, it did not. PG13. 120m. BROADWAY.

Previews

BATMAN VS. SUPERMAN: DAWN OF JUSTICE. The heroes (Ben Affleck and Henry Cavill) go armored ab to ab with creepy Jesse Eisenberg cheering on as Lex Luthor, while Wonder Woman (Gal Gadot) taps her boot waiting for her own movie. PG13. 151m. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

MY BIG FAT GREEK WEDDING 2. Nia Vardalos and John Corbett return in this sequel with a teenage daughter, aging parents and more Mediterranean matrimony. PG13. 94m. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

Continuing

10 CLOVERFIELD LANE. This tight, paranoid, claustrophobic thriller of a monster movie is well-acted, compelling and enjoyable from first frame to last. Starring Mary Elizabeth Winstead and John Goodman. PG13. 105m. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

DEADPOOL. A bloody, clever, distinctly adult Marvel vehicle for Ryan Reynolds' weird charisma. A fun break from the steady flow of grim comic adaptations. R. 108m. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

EMBRACE THE SERPENT. Drama about a 40-year partnership between scientists and an Amazonian shaman. RICHARDS' GOAT.

LONDON HAS FALLEN. Gerard Butler returns as a Secret Service agent delivering beatings and bullets in defense of the president (Aaron Eckhart) who's pursued by vengeful terrorists in the U.K. in this conspicuously geopolitically clueless sequel. PG13. 127m. BROADWAY.

MIRACLES FROM HEAVEN. Jennifer Garner stars as a woman on a mission for her ill daughter, whose recovery stumps doctors. PG. 109m. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

OSCAR NOMINATED SHORT FILMS: ANIMATED. All the nominees plus a few more. RICHARDS' GOAT.

OSCAR NOMINATED SHORT FILMS: LIVE ACTION. All the nominees. RICHARDS' GOAT.

WHERE TO INVADE NEXT. Michael Moore gets his passport stamped checking out systems, policies and laws in other countries. R. 83m. BROADWAY.

WHISKEY TANGO FOXTROT. Tina Fey stars in a freewheeling comedy about a war reporter that's compelling, funny and peopled with interesting characters, but misses the chance to take risks and say more. R. 111m. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

ZOOTOPIA. An animated animal take on the odd-couple buddy movie with Jason Bateman, Ginnifer Goodwin and Idris Elba. PG. 108m. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC AUCTION ON APRIL 22ND –APRIL 25TH 2016
OF TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY FOR DELINQUENT TAXES
Made pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3702

On, February 9, 2016, I, John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, was directed to conduct a public auction sale by the Board of Supervisors of Humboldt County, California. The tax-defaulted properties listed below are subject to the Tax Collector's power of sale and have been approved for sale by a resolution dated February 9th 2016 of the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors.

The sale will be conducted at www.bid4assets.com, from April 22nd 2016 through April 25th 2016 as a public auction to the highest bidder for not less than the minimum bid as shown on this notice. Parcels receiving no bids will be re-offered at www.bid4assets.com on June 10th through 13th 2016 at a minimum price appropriate to stimulate competitive bidding. Research the item prior to bidding. Due diligence research is incumbent on the bidder. The winning bidder is legally obligated to purchase the item.

Only bids submitted via the Internet will be accepted. Pre-registration is required. Register on-line at Bid4Assets.com by April 15th 2016. Bidders must submit a refundable deposit of $2,500.00 electronically, certified check or money order at www.bid4assets.com. The deposit will be applied to the successful bidder's purchase price. Full payment and deed information indicating how title should be vested is required within 48 hours after the end of the sale. Terms of payment are limited to wire transfers, certified checks or money orders. A California transfer tax will be added to and collected with the purchase price and is calculated at $.55 per each $500 or fraction thereof.

All property is sold as is. The county and its employees are not liable for the failure of any electronic equipment that may prevent a person from participating in the sale.

The right of redemption will cease on Thursday April 21st 2016, at 5 p.m. and properties not redeemed will be offered for sale. If the parcel is not sold, the right of redemption will revive and continue up to the close of business on the last business day prior to the next scheduled sale.

If the properties are sold, parties of interest, as defined in California Revenue and Taxation Code Section 4675, have a right to file a claim with the county for any excess proceeds from the sale. Excess proceeds are the amount of the highest bid in excess of the liens and costs of the sale that are paid from the sale proceeds.

More information may be obtained by contacting the Tax Collector at www.humboldt.gov or by calling (707) 476-2450 or toll free at 877-448-6829.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Assessment Number (Parcel No.), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map (if applicable), and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The assessor's maps and an explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the Assessor's Office.

The properties subject to this notice are situated in Humboldt County, California, and are described as follows:

NOTICE INVITING BIDS

1. Notice is hereby given that the Governing Board of the Jacoby Creek School District ("District"), of the County of Humboldt, State of California, will receive sealed bids for the Supply, Install and Commissioning of a Grid-Tied, 6.5 kW, Solar PV System Project ("Project") up to, but not later than, 3 p.m., on Tuesday, April 5, 2016, and will thereafter publicly open and read aloud the bids. All bids shall be received at the office of the Jacoby Creek School District, located at 1617 Old Arcata Road, in Bayside, California 95524.
 2. Each bid shall be completed on the Bid Proposal Form included in the Contract Documents, and must conform and be fully responsive to this invitation, the plans and specifications and all other Contract Documents. Copies of the Contract Documents are available for examination at the office of the Jacoby Creek School District, County of Humboldt, California, and may be obtained by licensed contractors for free.
 3. Each bid shall be accompanied by cash, a cashier's or certified check, or a bidder's bond executed by a surety licensed to do business in the State of California as a surety, made payable to the District, in an amount not less than ten percent (10%) of the maximum amount of the bid. The check or bid bond shall be given as a guarantee that the bidder to whom the contract is awarded will execute the Contract Documents and will provide the required payment and performance bonds and insurance certificates within ten (10) days after the notification of the award of the Contract.
 4. The successful bidder shall comply with the provisions of the Labor Code pertaining to payment of the generally prevailing rate of wages and apprenticeships or other training programs. The Department of Industrial Relations has made available the general prevailing rate of per diem wages in the locality in which the work is to be performed for each craft, classification or type of worker needed to execute the Contract, including employer payments for health and welfare, pension, vacation, apprenticeship and similar purposes. Copies of these prevailing rates are available to any interested party upon request and are online at <http://www.dir.ca.gov/DLSR>. The Contractor and all Subcontractors shall pay not less than the specified rates to all workers employed by them in the execution of the Contract. It is the Contractor's responsibility to determine any rate change.
 5. The schedule of per diem wages is based upon a working day of eight hours. The rate for holiday and overtime work shall be at least time and one half.
 6. The substitution of appropriate securities in lieu of retention amounts from progress payments in accordance with Public Contract Code §22300 is permitted.
 7. Pursuant to Public Contract Code §4104, each bid shall include the name and location of the place of business of each subcontractor who shall perform work or service or fabricate or install work for the contractor in excess of one-half of one percent (0.5%) of the bid price. The bid shall describe the type of the work to be performed by each listed subcontractor.
 9. Minority, women, and disabled veteran contractors are encouraged to submit bids. This bid is not subject to Disabled Veteran Business Enterprise requirements.
 10. The project is subject to compliance monitoring and enforcement by the California Department of Industrial Relations. In accordance with SB 854, all bidders, contractors and subcontractors working at the site shall be duly registered with the Department of Industrial Relations at time of bid opening and at all relevant times. Proof of registration shall be provided as to all such contractors prior to the commencement of any work.
 11. Each bidder shall possess at the time the bid is awarded the following classification(s) of California State Contractor's license: Class B (General Building Contractor) or a Class C-46 (Solar Contractor) or a Class C-10 (California Electrical Contractor).
 12. Bidders' Conference. A non-mandatory bidders' conference will be held at Jacoby Creek School on Monday, March 28, 2016 at 1:00 p.m. for the purpose of acquainting all prospective bidders with the Contract Documents and the Project site.

Pursuant to CA Civil Code 2923.3 IMPORTANT NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: YOU ARE IN DEFAULT UNDER A DEED OF TRUST, DATED 11/5/2009. UNLESS YOU TAKE ACTION TO PROTECT YOUR PROPERTY, IT MAY BE SOLD AT A PUBLIC SALE. IF YOU NEED AN EXPLANATION OF THE NATURE OF THE PROCEEDING AGAINST YOU, YOU SHOULD CONTACT A LAWYER On 5/6/2016 at 11:00 AM, CLEAR RECON CORP., as duly appointed trustee under and pursuant to Deed of Trust recorded 11/25/2009, as Instrument No. 2009-26581-9, of Official Records in the office of the County Recorder of Humboldt County, State of CALIFORNIA executed by: STEVEN EARL AUSBUN, AN UNMARRIED MAN AND ELLEN L. WONNACOTT AND LEONARD A. WONNACOTT, WIFE AND HUSBAND AS JOINT TENANTS WILL SELL AT PUBLIC AUCTION TO HIGHEST BIDDER FOR CASH, CASHIER'S CHECK DRAWN ON A STATE OR NATIONAL BANK, A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL CREDIT UNION, OR A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, OR SAVINGS BANK SPECIFIED IN SECTION 5102 OF THE FINANCIAL CODE AND AUTHORIZED TO DO BUSINESS IN THIS STATE: IN THE FRONT ENTRANCE OF THE HUMBOLDT COUNTY COURTHOUSE, 825 5TH STREET, EUREKA, CA 95501 all right, title and interest conveyed to and now held by it under said Deed of Trust in the property situated in said County and State described as: MORE FULLY DESCRIBED ON SAID DEED OF TRUST The street address and other common designation, if any, of the real property described above is purported to be: 618 ORCHARD STREET FIELDS LANDING, CALIFORNIA 95537 The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the street address and other common designation, if any, shown herein. Said sale will be held, but without covenant or warranty, express or implied, regarding title, possession, condition, or encumbrances, including fees, charges and expenses of the Trustee and of the trusts created by said Deed of Trust, to pay the remaining principal sums of the note(s) secured by said Deed of Trust. The total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the property to be sold and reasonable estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Sale is: $361,112.14 If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee, and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. The beneficiary under said Deed of Trust heretofore executed and delivered to the undersigned a written Declaration of Default and Demand for Sale, and a written Notice of Default and Election to Sell. The undersigned caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (800) 280-2832 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.AUCTION.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 025715-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. FOR SALES INFORMATION: (800) 280-2832 CLEAR RECON CORP. 4375 Jutland Drive Suite 200 San Diego, California 92117

Notice: You have been sued. The court may decide against you without you being heard unless you respond within 30 days. Read the information below. You have 30 calendar days after this Summons and legal papers are served on you to file a written response at this court and have a copy served on the plaintiff. A letter or phone call will not protect you. Your written response must be in proper legal form if you want the court to hear your case. There may be a court form that you can use for your response. You can find these court forms and more information at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), your county library, or the courthouse nearest you. If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the court clerk for free waiver form. If you do not file your response on time, you may lose the case by default, and your wages, money, and property may be taken without further warning from the court. There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may want to call an attorney referral service. If you cannot afford an attorney, you may be eligible for free legal services from a nonprofit legal services program. You can locate these nonprofit groups at the California Legal Services Web site (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org), the California Courts Online Self-Help Center(www.courtinfo.ca.gov/self-help), or by contacting your local court or county bar association. NOTE: The court has a statutory lien for waived fees and costs on any settlement or arbitration award of $10,000 or more in civil case. The court's lien must be paid before the court will dismiss the case. The name and address of the court is: Humboldt County Superior Court 825 Fifth Street Eureka, CA 95501 The name, address, and telephone number of plaintiff's attorney, or plaintiff without an attorney, is: Timothy J. Signs of Spring

humbug@northcoastjournal.com

Dandelions

In a recent exchange on an entomological Facebook page, someone urged me not to destroy the dandelions in my yard. I was told they are one of the first and most persistent sources of pollen and nectar for early emerging insects. The idea that the scourge of the lawnmower set could be so important amused me. However, always ready to question things, I did a few quick filters on my photo organizer and found 146 pictures of various insects fueling up at the brilliant yellow flowers.

There were members of many orders: Coleoptera (beetles), Diptera (flies), Hymenoptera (wasps and bees), Lepidoptera, butterflies and moths, and Dermaptera (earwig). It appeared that one earwig was actually eating the flower, petals and all.

So, I did a little reading on Taraxacum officinale, the common imported weed in our lawns. Alien invaders from the Old World, they actually aren't all that invasive except in an environment where the competing grass and weeds are regularly mowed or disturbed. You almost never see them in an open meadow.

Among their laudable traits is the fact that they can produce latex similar to the traditional rubber tree. Continental Tire company is currently running trials on tires using "Taraxagum" tread.

So, for now at least, I will postpone mowing the back yard. It's good to have a reason if anyone asks.

Spring wings

A walk on a recent sunny day yielded quite a few butterflies. All were busy, few staying in one place long enough to pose for a picture. There were many Pieris marginalis (aka margined whites), which are often mistaken for their close relatives the cabbage butterfly. I saw two Nymph- alis antiopa, or mourning cloaks, one of which was perfect and new while the other was bedraggled and worn. The fresh one landed, but flew away before I could get a good picture. There were a great many tiny Celastrina ladon, or azure blues, zipping around damp spots on the river bar. Once they land, they keep their wings closed above their backs, hiding the brilliant blue of their upper surfaces.

Finally, on my way home, a pair of rusty orange streaks flew by me. I paused and watched the two rapidly circle each other, spiraling upward with dizzying speed. Finally, one disappeared into the clutter of a madrone tree's foliage and the other flew up the path and landed, spreading its wings in the sun. The orange butterflies were of the anglewing species, I believe, though that family forms a challenging complex. I spent the next minute or so advancing one stealthy step at a time until I managed to get to the extreme limit of my camera's lens and snap a picture. Step by step, I snapped a photo with each pause, until I was close enough to get an acceptable photo.

With insect photography, close counts, so I developed this process: See the subject, turn on the camera, snap a photo and check the picture, adjusting anything that needs it. Advance toward it, snap another and repeat as often as you can. This assures that your camera is set up the way you want it (you haven't left the lens cap on or have it set up for a moon shot) to get the best picture possible. Each photo will be closer and likely better than the last, so you always get the best photo possible under the conditions.

I also saw my first trillium and hounds' tongue flowers blooming, and when I got home there was another springtime surprise: A tick was crawling on my leg. Yes, it is that time of year again. ●

Milton Dobkin 1922-2016

Milton (Milt) Dobkin passed away March 10, 2016 at the age of 94. He is survived by his son Donn and daughter-in-law Mandy Book; daughter, Bethami Dobkin and son-in-law Randy Chiotti; grandchildren Alexandra and Randall Dobkin; sister-in-law Carol Sartain, niece Angela Marie Volpe, and nephew Bernie Johnston. He also leaves behind companion Jane Crosbie.

Milt was born in Los Angeles to Ukranian and Russian immigrants, Moses and Ida (Kovensky) Dobkin, on January 31, 1922. He was raised in Los Angeles and attended Hyde Park Elementary School, Horace Mann Junior High School, and Manual Arts High School. Milt was the first in his family to graduate high school.

In 1940, Milt entered Los Angeles City College, where he was Associated Students President (1941-42) and earned a Civil Air Patrol license. He wrote, "It was at City College that I began to be interested in student activism, and particularly in international matters relating to peace and justice." During WWII, Milt was a Naval reservist and air cadet with active service as a petty officer and aviation instrument specialist, including stations in Charleston, South Carolina; Trinidad; and Brazil. Milt credited the National Youth Administration program for facilitating his introduction to higher education and the GI Bill with enabling his return to it.

Upon discharge in 1947, Milt enrolled at the University of Southern California, receiving an A.B. in 1949 and A.M. in 1950, both in Speech. He also completed advanced graduate work in Speech. While at USC, Milt again established himself as a leader and was noted on at least one occasion for his "display of oratorical fervor" (Daily Trojan, May 16, 1946). In 1948, he represented the Trojans at the National Debate Tournament with teammate Potter Kerfoot. Milt's years at college gave him the opportunity to gain broad understanding of and appreciation for the arts. His Hollywood roots and investment in education extended throughout his life and into all kinds of arts and entertainment, from studying classical piano to enjoying musical theater, opera, and film.

Milt's professional career began when he earned a secondary teaching credential and began teaching in Los Angeles area high schools (Beverly Hills, David Starr Jordan, and Los Angeles high school), adult evening schools, and part-time at LA City College. During his time as a high school teacher, Milt met his wife, Bette June Mattison, who was a high school debater at a neighboring school. They were married 56 years, from August 17, 1952 until Bette's passing in 2008.

In 1955, Milt and Bette moved to Humboldt State College. While there, he and Bette founded the forensics team at HSC, and Milt held the positions of Assistant Professor of Speech (1955), Speech Department Coordinator (1958-1960), Language Arts Division Chair (1960-62), and Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs (1964-66), with visiting teaching assignments in California and Montana from 1962-1968. He served as State College Dean, Faculty Affairs, at the CUSC's Chancellor's Office (1966-69) before returning to HSC become Vice President for Academic Affairs (1969-1984), and Acting President (1973-74). From 1987-1992 he served as President of the California State University Emeritus and Retired Professors Association. Milt was particularly proud of his service to numerous university and California system-wide academic curriculum and policy committees, as well as being active in faculty governance and scholarly associations. In 1985, he received the Distinguished Service Award from the Western States Communication Association, an organization for which he served as president in 1967.

Following his retirement from HSU, Milt's commitment to the education and welfare of others continued. He served on many local boards, including the Humboldt Arts Council, Dell'Arte, Redwood Arts Council, General Hospital Advisory Board and Humboldt Child Care Council, and as an elected member and chair of the College of the Redwoods Board of Trustees, California Faculty Association, and Retired Public Employees Association. In 2000, Milt and Bette were honored in the California House of Representatives as "extraordinary citizens" of Humboldt County for "their life-long contribution to one of the Nation's most precious rights – participation in the political system... their unwavering commitment and compassion, and for their contribution to the ideals and traditions that have made America great."

Milt's son, Donn, was born in 1961, followed by his daughter, Bethami (Beth), in 1963. Family time included fishing for salmon (and catching snapper) with his son, searching at night for pet caterpillars for his daughter, and of course numerous trips to Reno and Lake Tahoe (where card tables eventually took on multiple meanings for the children). Living "on the wild side" had nothing to do with outside adventure for Milt; for instance, he absolutely hated camping. He preferred the risky business of betting on the ponies at the Humboldt County Fair, participating in football pools, obsessively purchasing Lotto tickets, and frequenting local casinos, particularly when Pai Gow was available.

Milt's high standards as a connoisseur of fashion, food and wine made life difficult for those who wanted to shop or choose entertainment for him. He was most satisfied and comfortable as the consummate host and controller of menus and libations. Throughout his life, he enjoyed sharing meals with friends, which led to elaborate grocery shopping routines, personal relationships with butchers and checkers, and forays into pasta making and cheese tasting. Milt's passion for travel carried him around the world and across many decades, most often with Bette and friends, but also with family members and, in later years, with his partner, Jane. He delighted in sharing travel experiences with those he loved. In his earlier years, cruise directors often approached Milt with the proposition of employment as an escort, raising the ire of his equally impressive wife, Bette. Milt completed his final cruise in December 2015, just shy of his 94th birthday, and having visited every continent except Antarctica.

Milt was a life-long Democrat and ardent educator, offering civics lessons to his caregivers until the last days before his passing. He simply loved people. He supported women before feminism entered popular vocabulary, evidenced in part by his promotion of his wife and daughter's careers. In his later years, his life was kept whole by his relationship with Jane. He was quick to share jokes, newspaper articles and anecdotes, taking genuine interest in others and generously offering his opinions about almost anything. Finally, Milt believed in the importance of education and the centrality of faculty in advancing it.

He will be missed not only by his friends, family, and the community of caregivers who supported him, but by the countless people he touched with his wisdom, grace, and good humor. Please join in celebrating his life on Saturday, April 9, 12 noon, at the Baywood Country Club in Arcata. Contributions in his memory may be sent to the Dobkin Forensics Endowment at HSU, or to any charitable organization that advances social or environmental justice.
